How to Attract & Date Asian Women

Welcome, to a whole new world of dating and relating!

The tips, strategies, and "models" I share in this report are based on research, opinions, tests and overall experiences with Asian women and their culture.

These tips and strategies have worked for me, as well as for lots of other men who have field-tested the info for themselves.

I will lay out the tips techniques starting with the quickest and easiest first... stuff that you can start putting to use right away - as in today - to help you to instantly start doing better with Asian women.

After that, I will cover the next set of tips and techniques that may take you a bit longer to put into effect. And, so on.

That way, you can get started right away with the quick and easy stuff, and start seeing some results - while you're working on the other stuff.

Sound good?

What Asian Women Find Attractive

First of all, let me quickly clarify as to which Asian women this report is focused on.

Primarily, the tips and strategies in this report are designed to attract Asian women who are not born or raised in Western countries (like USA, England, Canada, etc.) as mentioned in the description page / offer for this report.

The strategies in this report will work best on women who are still grounded more in the Asian culture, beliefs, and backgrounds.

I will share some great tips with you in this section, to help you appear more attractive to Asian women.

As I go over those tips, one of the key things you should keep in mind is, you are not just trying to impress her... you are also trying to impress her friends and her family!

What that means is, the things that she finds attractive about you will also include things that will show you in a positive light to her friends and family.

Family and community are very important to Asians, especially to Asian women. Asian women are very concerned about how they will appear to their friends, family, peers, and to their community as a whole.

The man she chooses to date or associate with will be a reflection of her, personally. If she doesn't feel comfortable about being seen with you, you are not going to get far with her.

On the flip side, if she is able to comfortably and eagerly introduce you to the people in her life, you are going to do very well with her.

Keep all of that in mind as you read through the "attraction" tips below...

Physical Appearance

Respect and formality is big in the Asian culture. This is seen not only in how they talk to and act around each other, but also in how they present themselves visually/physically.

You will rarely see an Asian woman walking down the street in sweatpants and sandals, unless she has been born and raised in a Western country. Asian women will almost always appear presentable and very well put together.

And, guess what...that's what they expect from the men too. In fact, they find a man who is well-dressed and presentable as attractive.

Also...there is no way she is going to want to be seen in public with a dude who looks rough or thuggy (even if she is secretly attracted to that look – which is rare.) And, she is definitely not going to hang out with a guy whom she can't respectfully present and introduce to her friends, and especially her family!

So...if you happen to be standing next to a guy who is twice as good looking as you are, but you happen to be much better dressed than he is, you will usually have a better shot with an Asian woman than the other, better-looking guy.

That means, a long-sleeved shirt with a collar instead of shirt-sleeves or t-shirt/golf shirt...long pants instead of shorts or sweats, a good pair of shoes instead of sneakers. You get the idea. Just dress as if you're going to a formal event.

As I mentioned, it's not just about being well-dressed. It's also about respect. That means, along with being well-dressed, you also need to look clean, i.e. clean shaven, showered, clean breath, no body odor, a touch of a nice cologne, a nice haircut (preferably short hair vs. long,) etc.

The same applies for other facial hair, as well as overall body hair. Trim it all down, nice and neat.

If you have tattoos, you'd probably want to cover them. They won't reflect well on you.

While slightly roughed-up hair and the top of your shirt unbuttoned may work well for the Western girl, it won't work too well with Asian women.

Respect and formality goes beyond just physical appearance. In fact, physical appearance is just the start of it.

That means, you also need to...

Speak Well

You can't approach her in that cool, hip, "street" way. Sounding like a rapper or even a "Back Street Boy" isn't going to cut it.

You have to speak well and appear intelligent. And, you definitely can't use any swear or cuss words.

You may already know that the Asian community puts a lot of weight on education as well as wisdom. And, so will she. How you speak is a representation of your intelligence.

Speaking well also means, watch the volume of your voice around her and her friends. Speak only loud enough so they can hear you, depending on the environment. But, do not shout or be unnecessarily loud - and definitely not obnoxious.

The same goes for speaking with other people. You can be yelling at your friend from across the street.

Listen

Speaking well is obviously just one part of good communication. You also have to be a good listener.

Pump the brakes on the unnecessary fluff talk, or bragging/boasting about stuff. And listen to what she has to say. This is a common mistake that guys make, especially with Asian women. They tend to talk way too much.

Yes, you should help her along the way, especially in the beginning of the conversation, if she's not completely comfortable with talking to you yet...by asking her some questions, etc.

But be mindful of any instances where you start talking too much while not giving her a chance to offer her opinions or input. And, when she does respond, show your appreciation for it - and for her. Ask her follow-up questions about it, to show her that you are interested - and that you were listening.

That also means, don't be in a big rush to try to move things forward and/or escalate the conversation. Give her your time. Again, it's just a simple way to be respectful.

Not talking your mouth off also creates a little air of mystery around you, which is always a good thing to project around women in general.

Be a Gentleman

Continuing with the respectful theme, you also have to be a gentleman all around. (Remember, these are all ways to make yourself more attractive to her. So don't take any of this stuff lightly.)

Sure, being a gentleman includes opening doors for her, pulling chairs out for her to sit, and all that stuff. (And, it also includes being on time, being punctual. Asians are generally big on punctuality.)

But, it also includes paying attention to her beyond just listening to what she's saying. Pay attention to how she's feeling as well, i.e. be mindful of her comfort level, her environmental effects, etc.

Asian women are romantics at heart. You can rack a lot of points in your favor by showing concern that you care about her well-being as well as her overall safety.

So, doing what may seem like little things to you can actually work in big ways, in your favor. Making sure that she's comfortable, that she gets home safely, walking with them if they are by themselves, and so on...these are all things that will make her feel special.

Of course, don't over do it - because you're paying attention to her comfortable level too, remember?

For example, you can ask her how her drink is and if she's enjoying it. But, don't do it after every sip that she takes. And, if it seems like she's feeling smothered, you're definitely going overboard.

Otherwise, paying attention to her and showing concern is a very good thing - and very attractive to her.

Being respectful doesn't mean that you can't have some fun. You can definitely have fun with her, joke around, etc.

But, none of the fun/jokes should be done in a disrespectful way. In other words, you should not make fun of her or who she is. And, you probably don't want to make fun of her friends, her family, or her people and culture in general. (No funny Asian accents or chats about "bad Asian drivers," etc. either)

You can also pay her compliments about her appearance, her personality, etc. But, you have to do it in the right way. More on that later.

While we're on the subject of being a gentleman and being respectful, you should know that it doesn't end with you. In fact, you're only the starting point of all this.

What I mean is, anyone that she meets through you is also reflection of you, and of your respect for her.

So...if you've got friends - or even family members - who are a little rough around the edges, a bit more "relaxed" about their clothing and appearance, are loud and obnoxious...and basically anyone who doesn't come across to them the way that you do, will reflect poorly on you.

If you do have any friends, acquaintances or family/relatives that won't match the criterion I've listed throughout this entire section of the report, it's best that you don't introduce them to her...at least not until you are already dating her, or sleeping with her. And, even then, go about it delicately.

This stuff works in reverse too. So, if you've got friends who will reflect positively on you, you should definitely introduce them to her. Doing so will, again, rack some points in your favor.

And, remember what I wrote at the start of this section...

Family, friends, and community are very important to her. And she's very mindful of how she appears to those people.

TIP: That also means, if you are able to get along well with the people in her life...her friends, and especially her family...and make them a part of your life, you are pretty much a shoe-in!

To extend that a little further... she will also expect you to have a good relationship with your own family. If you don't happen to be close to your family, and especially if you don't get along too well with your family/relatives, do not bring it up.

Definitely do not say anything negative or disrespectful about your own family and/or relatives.

And don't introduce her to them if you don't get along well with them, or aren't very close to them. Delay that part of the process until you have a better relationship with her. But, do it tactfully and subtly or else she will suspect that something is up.

It's Never Casual

Being a gentleman also means that you don't treat her like someone you're only interested in having a quick fling with.

Even if she is interested in having a temporary relationship or fling with you, she doesn't want you to assume that about her from the get go or treat her as a sex object. She doesn't want to feel cheap or slutty. No woman does.

Also...remember, again... how she appears to everyone else around her is very important to her. (We'll talk more about 'discretion' later.)

As such, you should be careful to not appear to be to the kind of guy that only wants sex, or likes to sleep around, or is a "player."

And...since Asian women are also big on romance, trying to rush her into having sex with you will usually blow up in your face.

Show her that you're interested in more than just sex. Show her that you're interested in her as a person, as a fellow human being. (There are ways to have sex with her on the same night. Rushing her is not the way.)

Maintain Composure

To take things a step further, your overall physical, mental, and emotional state is also a reflection of who you really are, as a person.

Appearing respectful to her, her friends and her family is a great start. And it will definitely make you more attractive than other guys.

But, it still extends beyond that...

How you treat people in general - and how you respond to situations overall – especially when you're in public, will help or hurt your "attractiveness" in the eyes of an Asian woman.

Getting angry, upset, snapping at her or others, and generally losing your cool, especially over little things - and especially in public, is not going to reflect well on you.

You don't have to be a doormat, but you must maintain your composure and appear physically, mentally, and emotionally stable. If you don't, most Asian women will not want to be around you nor want to be seen with you.

Be The Man

Gender roles are very clear-cut in the Asian community, unlike what we see in Western cultures.

As such, you have to take the leading role when interacting with most Asian women. (Think of it as an extension of the "gentleman" role.)

In the Asian culture, women depend on men a lot more than in the Western culture. Asian women are also not the most comfortable with making decisions or dealing with problems - generally speaking. Not because they aren't capable - but because they don't have to. So, most of them never learn to. They leave that stuff for the men to figure out.

This may sound weird to us, especially if we're raised in the Western culture where women are encouraged to do and be everything - and to be self-sufficient.

But, if you want to attract an Asian woman, you'll have to start getting used to being the man, i.e. taking on the leading role in the relationship.

That means, when problems - even little ones - crop up during your interaction with an Asian woman, she will probably expect you to deal with it and resolve it.

And, if the problem or situation is a big one, they may very well panic or freeze up. But, they will expect you - as the man - to handle it. It could be a situation where the waiter messes up the order, or she loses her purse, or whatever.

Also...as mentioned in the earlier sections, you will need to keep your head calm and collected so that you can deal with these situations without getting angry, upset or flustered/panicked.

But, it also means that she will depend on you to make plans for your dates and outings with her, i.e. what to do, where to go, when to meet, how to dress, etc.

And she will expect you to provide them with the details ahead of time, very clearly...so that she can prepare accordingly, and also so that she doesn't have to try to figure out what you meant.

It also helps if you offer to pick her up instead of telling her to meet you somewhere for the date/meeting. She may decline your offer, but will appreciate that you at least cared enough to offer. (And, you could ensure her that it's no problem, that you'll be happy to do so, and see how she responds.)

Be the man.

Approaching Her

Now that you're familiar with how to become more attractive to her, and you've also learned how to dress in a way that Asian women will find acceptable, appealing and attractive, it's time to go over some specifics on how to approach her for the very first time and start a conversation with her.

Once again, the way you would approach an Asian woman effectively is very different from the advice I give in most of my other reports on how to approach the Western woman.

So, make note of the big, as well as the subtle, differences I point out. The better you understand and apply this, the better your chances of dating Asian women will be.

First of all, remember what we talked about earlier... about being a man. Here's another way to look at it...

You can be a gentleman but still be manly. You can be strong without being controlling. You can be confident without being arrogant. You can be polite and pleasant, without being a wussy.

Make sense so far? Great... let's build on that...

Be Direct

In order to maintain the "be a man" persona, you have to approach Asian women very directly. That is not to say that you should be confrontational. But, you have to appear confident.

That means, you should not be nervous, you shouldn't hesitate, and you definitely shouldn't ask for permission.

You simply go up and say what you have to say - in a casual, friendly and confident manner - with a smile.

Don't beat around the bush. Don't hang around the area for an hour, and don't circle her like a shark repeatedly.

Be direct. Be a man... with a smile.

You should also be aware of your body language. Your overall posture and body movement should also project the sense of being relaxed, casual, and friendly.

Loosen up, stand tall, arms relaxed, with an overall friendly, open and "safe" vibe.

And... as mentioned earlier, pay attention to her. Notice her body language and overall state as well, after you approach her.

If she doesn't seem to want to engage with you, there's probably a good reason. Her parents and/or elders may be nearby. She may be spoken for, and so on. So, tell her to have a nice day and move on to someone else.

Be Discrete

You also already know that the typical Asian woman is very aware and concerned about how she appears to everybody around her, and what everybody thinks or assumes about her. She always wants to be seen as respectful, and generally in a positive light.

For that reason, she isn't going to feel very comfortable talking to a male stranger in public... especially if most of the people around her are also Asian. If you approach her in front of a lot of people, she will try to end that conversation very quickly - that is, if she responds to you at all.

So, if she happens to be in a very public place, you should hang back - without giving off a "stalker" vibe - and wait until she is in a more private setting, where most people can't see her talking to you.

The fewer people that you have around her when you approach her, the better chances you'll have of getting a positive response from her.

Obviously, this won't always be possible, and sometimes time may be against you - while you're trying to wait for her to move to a more private location.

If such is the case, you will either have to move on to somebody else...or you could just go up to her anyway - as subtly as possible - and see what happens. I will leave that up to you.

Important: While we're on the subject of being discrete, you should also be very careful about not touching her physically, especially in public.

Normally, I would advise men to start touching women, in casual and "incidental" ways very early on during the interaction. But, with Asian women, it's different. There are cultural differences to consider, as I've mentioned earlier.

A casual, innocent touch may not mean much to Westerners, but it can be a serious thing in the Asian culture.

Compliment Her

One of the best ways to approach an Asian woman and initiate a conversation with her is to pay her a sincere compliment.

Opening with a compliment is something I would never advise you to do when approaching other women, but it works very well with Asian women. They accept and enjoy flattery. (As I've mentioned earlier, they are romantics at heart.)

Of course, the trick is to switch topics after you give her the compliment. If you stay in the "compliment" zone for too long, she will start to get uncomfortable and self-conscious, as any normal person would. (More on that, later.)

You can simply say, "Hi, you are very beautiful"...or..."Hi, you are so pretty."

And, remember...say it with a smile, and with a relaxed and friendly attitude. If you're nervous or fidgety, she will get uncomfortable very quickly. (I will tell you where to go, after you've complimented her.)

Gadget Talk

Generally speaking, Asian women tend to be very interested in technology and electronics, especially cell phones, iPods, iPad, laptop computer, etc. - things that are portable and easy to carry around.

If you see her playing on one of her gadgets, or even if you see her fiddling with her phone, you can easily approach her and ask a question about her phone. (If she's talking on the phone, you will obviously want to wait till she's done with the call.)

You don't need to be creative here. Just say... "What kind of phone is that?"... or..."Do you like that phone?" ... "Does it take good pictures?"...etc. Any of those work just fine.

You can mention that you're shopping for a new phone or trying to upgrade your phone or whatever works for your particular situation.

Cool Item

You already know that you should pay attention to her. As you're doing that, you can also quickly scan her for something you can use.

For example... notice something cool, funky or unique about what she's wearing, or carrying: her clothes, jewelry, accessories, purse, shoes, whatever...

And, pay her a compliment about that item and how cool or unique it is, and that she has great taste. You can even tell her how it works so well for her, and/or makes her look even prettier/cuter.

Women, especially Asian women, are very particular about what they wear, what accessories to match their outfits with, and also about displaying their uniqueness. And, the fact that you noticed that about her and paid her a compliment will work very well for you.

Next, switch from the compliment mode and... ask her where she got that item from. You can make up some excuse about trying to buy a gift for a friend (not a girlfriend, obviously)...and mention that maybe she can help you out or something.

I realize that many of these openers seem too easy to work on women. And, you're right. Most of this stuff will never work on other women. But, it happens to work very well on Asian women.

Important: Remember to go in with a relaxed and friendly attitude. And...show her that you're a fun person. Smile, maybe make a joke about something (not anything about her directly.)

And, of course, if you followed all of my other advice I gave earlier in the report, you would also come across as a respectful, stable, non-thuggy, non-player type of person. In other words, a worthy candidate for future communication and interaction...and someone she wouldn't mind introducing to her friends and family, in the near future.

After you have initiated the conversation by using one of the openers given above, you can then move the conversation topic towards the direction of learning more about her.

As mentioned earlier, you can help her along by asking a question, letting her answer, and then revealing that same detail about yourself. (You can also use this technique to relay some positive points about yourself, without sounding like you're bragging - because you would have asked her about the same thing, first.)

For example, you could ask her whether she lives in the area, let her answer, and then you could tell her which area/city you live in. If you have a nice place, you could slip that into the conversation too. If your place happens to be close to where she lives, you would already have something in common to bond over - even if it's in a small way.

(As you're talking about where you live, you could also slip in there that you live by yourself, to let her know that you're single. Remember, she will want to know that, but she will never ask you about it directly. So, it's your job to smoothly slip those things about yourself into the conversation.)

You could then ask her what she does, let her answer, talk about that a bit especially if it's something interesting, and then you could tell her what you do for a living.

Remember, always put your best foot forward. If there are things that would reflect negatively on you, don't mention those things. And if those things tend to come up during your conversation, relay it to her in a positive way instead of sounding like it's a negative or hurdle you're trying to overcome. (As I said, put your best foot forward, i.e. nothing negative about yourself or about your life.)

If you need help with the above, go back and read through the sections that describes what Asian women find attractive, and use those things as building blocks for constructing your answers. Let her see you as an attractive candidate.

If you've taken care of all the other stuff that I advised you to do, you would already be pretty well dressed, and be talking properly, to relay to her that you're intelligent, well put together, respectable, stable, and all that good stuff.

Getting Her Number

If you've followed all of the above advice so far, you'll do pretty well. Now, you can get her phone number.

The interesting thing is, getting most Asian women's phone number is actually not that difficult because they view exchanging phone numbers very differently than other women do.

To Asian women, exchanging phone numbers is almost like two people exchanging business cards. It's not that big a deal. Of course, that's provided you followed all of my other advice that I shared earlier in this report.

As long as you're friendly, relaxed, and have a fun, chill energy about you, it won't be a big deal for her to exchange numbers with you.

But, there's an easier way to get her number, if you aren't able to make the "direct asking" work for you...

A great strategy that I've tested out many times successfully is to ask her if she "texts" a lot on her phone. Typically, texting is huge among Asians (for both men and women.) She will probably reply by saying, "Of course! I text all the time"...or...she may just give you a simple "Yes."

Next, tell her (don't ask her) that you are going to text her about XYZ. ("XYZ" can be anything that you talked about earlier: getting her advice about buying that gift, or whatever.)

Then, you can say, "What number should I send the texts to?" as you hold out your phone, and gesturing to be ready to put her number in.

Saying that you will "text" her lightens the blow just a little - just in case you're hesitant about asking her for her phone number directly.

After you get her number, send her a text message right away while you say, "Okay, let me test it out just to be sure I put in the right number." (Don't say "just to be sure you gave me the right number" - not even jokingly.)

If you do all of the above as if it's no big deal, she won't think it's a big deal either. Remember... you are the male - and you can take the leading role. Just do it in a casual and relaxed manner.

Psst... don't forget to get her name, if you haven't already done so.

When you do text her later (preferably that same day,) be sure to quickly remind her of who you are, in your message. Otherwise, she may forget. And, if she does, don't take it personally. Just help jog her memory, if needed.

If you entertained her during your initial conversation, there's a good chance she'll remember you anyway. But it never hurts to quickly remind her again, in the text message.

Hint: Don't wait too long to text her after you get her number. An hour is the maximum I would wait. No more. And when you do text her, don't get into a heavy conversation. Just remind her of who you are, thank her for helping you, etc. and let her know that you really enjoyed meeting her and chatting with her.

That's all (for now.)

And, remember what I advised earlier.... be the man! That means don't appear needy, or hurt or offended if she doesn't reply to your text right away - or at all.

If you did all the other stuff right (as I advised you to,) and if she is single, she will very likely text you back.

And if she doesn't, no big deal. You can try texting her again later, and ask her how her day is going, what she's up to, etc. (Sometimes, Asian women will delay replying right away just to see if you're serious about getting to know her - or if you're just interested in sex.)

If you still don't get any response from her, don't take it personally.

You can talk to another woman the very next day. Or heck, even later that same day! Don't get hung up on any one girl unless you've already started going out with her and/or dating her.

Be the man! There are lots of women out there, waiting for you to talk to.

Leave On A High Note

All of the above, from talking to her for the first time to getting her number, can take as little as 10 minutes, or less. The more you practice it, the better you'll get. But, there's no need to try to rush it if you don't have to.

After you've entertained her for a bit, gotten her to share some information about herself with you, and got her phone number, don't hang around for too long.

Keep in mind that you just interrupted her day by talking to her. And, even if she enjoyed the interaction with you, she will probably have other things to get to that day.

So...instead of letting her tell you that she has to go, or instead of letting the conversation die out on its own (which you should never allow to happen,) you should be the one to end the conversation. Of course, do it politely - by giving her another minute or two of conversation after getting her phone number.

Doing so will also allow you to leave on a high note, i.e. when things are going really well, she's having fun with you...instead of waiting for the conversation to die out and then leaving.

By leaving on a high note, that's what she will remember about you -- the fun, enjoyable exchange vs the dying out of the conversation and the awkward goodbyes.

Also, by leaving on a high note, she could very well find herself thinking about you even after you're gone. That's always a good thing.

Finally, when you are the one to end the conversation with her, you will automatically separate yourself from all the other guys she has dealt with. Most guys will latch on to a girl until someone pries them off her with a crowbar. That's not a man... that's a boy.

So, when you come along, and show her that you're this eligible stranger... and then end the conversation and walk away, she will automatically put more value on you than she would on most other guys.

You will make an impression on her right away.

As you can see from the information I've shared so far, approaching a typical Asian woman and initiating a conversation with her is fairly easy - if you follow all of the advice I've shared earlier.

Most guys mess it up because they don't have the information that I've provided you in this report. And...they also don't know how to proceed, once they have opened a woman and got her number.

But you won't have that problem. :-)

Increasing Attraction

Okay let's build on the momentum that we created during that first approach and conversation with her.

You already left on a high note, showing her that you have more value than most other guys she's dealt with. And...you used all the other tips and advice I shared with you, to get the attraction process started for her, from the very moment she saw you.

Now, you are meeting her somewhere, for the second time. It can be as casual and relaxed as going out for a cup of coffee, or getting her to help you shop for something.

And, during the second meeting, you can take the interaction further. As you do, you will begin to create some real attraction in her mind, for you.

Does She Measure Up

In most of my other seduction reports, I advise men to start "qualifying" the (non-Asian) girl during that first interaction with her, soon after you've approached the girl and started talking to her.

"Qualifying" is a process where you let the girl know, in a playful, way that you are "testing" her to see if she is good enough for you - if she measures up to your standards. And, it works really well to "pull" her more towards you, i.e. to get her to like you more and put more value on you.

Most guys would never ever dare to do this to a woman they're attracted to. They are too busy trying to please her and kiss up to her in every way. And, women are used to that – as well as bored by it.

That is another reason "qualifying" works so well - because it separates you from all other guys right away. And, it makes her work on trying to impress you for a change.

First of all, I don't recommend that you try to qualify her during the first interaction/meeting with her, for reasons I've mentioned earlier on in the report.

(There are times - and ways - to start qualifying her right away...especially if you happen to meet her in a night club and are planning on trying to have sex with her on that same night. But, I wouldn't recommend that right now, unless you've already had some solid practice with using all the advice I've shared with you so far.)

Generally, I would advise you to wait till a second/follow-up meeting to qualify her, i.e. after she's become more comfortable with you, and with being around you.

And remember, you have to go about it in a sincere - but playful way, so as to not hurt or embarrass her in any way. (Unlike Western women, Asian women are not as comfortable about being put on the spot...they can be more shy, insecure, self-conscious than other women... so you have to go about it carefully.)

"I really like you, Phuong. You seem like a cool person...and you're also very pretty... but I have to be honest with you... if you're not a good dancer, I'm afraid I won't be able to date you..."

You can use anything else to replace "dancer"... i.e. any other quality or skill that she will likely already possess (and something that isn't too serious or major) ... so that it would be fairly easy for her to try to convince you that she is in fact a good "dancer"...or... "cook"...or... "hugger/cuddler"...or whatever.

Note: By making the above statement, you are also implying that the two of you are going to be dating. And...when she tries to prove to you that she is good at said skills, she will also be "acknowledging" to the fact that she will be dating you. (This is all happening subtly in her mind, by the way. You're getting her mind used to thinking of you as a potential date, or even as a boyfriend.)

Push Her Out

After you've qualified her, and reeled her in closer to you, chat with her for a few minutes. And, then, reel her back out!

This "pull and push" technique is very important in continuing to build attraction, and pulling her in closer and closer to you.

Important: Remember what I've advised earlier in the report... do not ever make fun of her physical appearance, or who she is as a person, or anything to do with her ethnicity, her accent, her culture or her people. Those things are off-limits when it comes to teasing her.

Pick something almost insignificant, that doesn't define her character or culture, to tease her about.

For example, you could start talking about other subjects...like dating, romance, or even music, movies, shows, or whatever... and wait for her to say something that you don't particularly agree with.

Like, maybe she says that she likes cats (or dogs, it doesn't matter which) and you can say...

"Oh nooo....not cats!! Oh darn it, you were doing so well...but I don't know if I can continue to date someone who likes cats! I'm sorry but we will have to stop seeing each other now...I will have to break up with you...."

Give her a moment to take that in. Then, start laughing (or smiling) to assure her that you were only joking / teasing her. And follow up with...

"Well, it's okay. I'll make an exception in your case...because you have all these other great qualities."

Reeling her in... then releasing the tension to push her out just a little...and then pulling back in again. Get it?

This will build on the attraction she has for you, and it will keep her on her toes. Plus, it will make the interaction a bit more fun and exciting for her - unlike what she would experience with most other guys. (That's always a good thing.)

And, just to keep her from wondering about whether you really don't like cats (especially if she loves them, or has one,) assure her that you're only kidding - that you don't have a problem with cats (or dogs, or whatever the topic may be.) This is important.

Playing with her in this way will also show her that you are confident, as well as playful (fun) - both of which are qualities women usually desire in men.

Don't over-do the "pushes," especially if she seems to be more on the shy, timid, insecure side.

Generally speaking, the hotter she is, the more she will be able to handle your "push-pulls" and the more you should do it.

You will have to gauge the amount yourself, based on your observations and interactions with her. It's different for each woman.

IMPORTANT: As you're using the "qualifying" or the "push-pull" techniques, do not ever try to make her jealous of other women. The 'jealousy' card works on Western women but is a no-no with Asians.

Asian women can already be very jealous and cautious of your past girlfriends and relationships.

So, don't give her any reason to start feeling jealous about anyone else, as far as you are concerned.

And, if you have dated Asians in the past, do not tell her that. That's a surefire way to get you in trouble, in more ways than one. (This is one of the rare situations when I would advise you to omit the truth.)

Introducing Touch

Introducing physical touch, and getting her used to your touching her, is obviously important - especially if you would like to eventually kiss her, and have sex with her.

But, as I've warned you earlier, touching is taken a lot more seriously in the Asian culture than in the Western world, especially when you're touching a woman.

So, you have to go about it more delicately...and pay close attention to the woman's comfort level (which is something you're supposed to be doing from the very beginning, anyway.)

Now that you're having a second meeting with her, you can introduce touching by using a technique called "accidental touching."

Accidental touching is when your hand "accidentally" brushes against hers when you move it to grab your drink, or turn your body, or whatever. The same can happen with your legs, thighs, and even your bodies, as a whole.

You can also use "incidental" touching, which is when you happen to touch her "in the moment." Some examples are, going for a "high five" after something fun or exciting happens, putting your palm on her back (or shoulder) as you lead her somewhere, walk through a door, or even help her to sit down in her chair.

A great way to get some 'touch' going is... you could offer to show her something on your phone, related to the conversation you were having, (say, a picture or video of something, or even a certain function of your phone.) But let her lean in closer first - and you can then mirror/match her lean-in, as well. Your bodies will touch as they casually come closer to "view the picture/video on the phone," etc. You could even lightly touch her back as you enjoy whatever's on the phone.

Now...the trick is to start with some "accidental" touches, i.e. get her used to your touching, even if it's on an unconscious level for her...

Then...do the same form of touching deliberately. So, if you started with the incidental leaning (while looking at your or her phone,) now try to give her a "side hug" after something comes up in conversation that makes you go "Awww..." ....or.... anything that gives you a chance to tell her she's really nice, or sweet, or whatever. (If you pay attention to her and your conversation, you'll get these opportunities.)

Of course, after you do that, watch for her comfort level. If she seems to get uncomfortable, or adjusts/leans her body away from you, or looks around to see if others are watching, etc. pull back and do some more "accidental" touching... as well as build more comfort through your conversation.

If she handles the incidental touching well, that's great. Now you can move to the next level of "accidental" touching. (Example: accidentally touching her thigh.)

Next, you would follow that up with a deliberate touch of the same kind.

See how this works? Accidental or incidental touch first. Get her used to it by doing it more than one time if needed (depending on the woman.) And then, follow up with a deliberate touch of the same kind.

With some practice, you can continue to escalate your touching all the way up to where she starts touching you.

A great way to ensure that happens is to do the "pull back" after some touching. So that she will start missing your touch, which will want her to get you to touch her more, or cause her to touch you.

Example: you could touch her arm or place your hand over hers for a while - once she's comfortable with that level of touching, of course.

And then move it away. This will cause her to feel a little weird, it will make her wonder why you're not touching her anymore. And...it will make her miss (and want!) your touch some more.

Then, touch her again...in a slightly more intimate way. By doing so, you have just escalated the touching - and her comfort level - even further.

Pretty soon, you'll be touching each other as if you're already dating.

Kiss

Of course, after that level of touching starts to happen, you can find an opportunity to kiss her – on the lips – for the first time. But, don't try to rush this or push it on her. Remember, monitor her comfort level - and her overall likeness for you - closely.

When you do kiss her, don't ever surprise her with it. Touch her hair first, and maybe even the side of her face - while she's looking at you.

Let her know that a kiss may be about to happen. And, if she seems ready for it, slowly go in. And make it soft, gentle and romantic.

If she's not ready, you'll be able to tell through her body language. Don't worry, and don't apologize. Just continue talking and building more comfort. And then try the kiss again later.

Note: Escalating the touching in this way takes some practice. So, you'd better go out there and start practicing as soon as possible! The more you do it, the better you'll get at it.

Onwards and Upwards...

Physical touching - especially kissing - is a major step for any woman. Even more so for an Asian woman.

So, after you've reached this stage, you're pretty much "in" - and you now have to simply keep my other tips in mind, which I shared with you earlier in the report.

If you do that, you will be able to continue to take your relationship with her further - as far as you'd like to, actually. As long as you stay congruent with who she thinks you are - as a man, and as a person.

Go back and review the "What Asian Women Find Attractive" section, if you need to.

Keep in mind that you're not just wooing her, you're wooing her friends and especially her family.

If she offers to introduce you to her friends and especially her family, do not hesitate. Go for it. There's nothing to worry about. Asians are generally very hospitable and friendly.

Try to build a good respectful and endearing relationship with her family. If her family likes you, you're definitely in - for as long as you want to be.

Remember, what I've mentioned many times before... her family is very important to her. So, do not ever criticize or talk negatively about her family - or even her friends.

And definitely don't ever try to tell her (even if lovingly) to do something that goes against what her parents told her to do nor to defy her parents in anyway (unless she wants to! And even then, be very careful of how it comes across.)

She has known her parents for much longer than she has known you. And, they're her family. So, you will definitely lose that battle. Don't even try to get in the middle of all that stuff. Even if what she's doing for her parents makes no sense to you. (There are many cultural differences that you won't even begin to understand till months or even years later. Some, you will never understand. That's just the way it is.)

Similarly, you don't want to seem like you're trying to control her or her life in any way. Sure, you can be the man, make the decisions she's not comfortable making, and so on. But...don't try to change her, or her habits, her way of thinking, or her lifestyle in any serious way...even if what she's doing may seem stupid or silly to you at the time.

Also...don't ever try to make her feel insecure, self-conscious, stupid, or that she's beneath you (and you're superior) in any way. Don't lecture her or preach to her either. You already know that you shouldn't make fun of her directly, nor of her parents, culture, community, religion, or any of that stuff.

Accept her for who she is. And, she will do the same to you. (If you have a major issue with who she is or what she does, you can always break it off and try dating another girl.)

Asian women are generally very loving, generous, and extremely loyal. So, as long as you treat her right, she will have no reason to treat you any differently.

They know how to make a man feel like a king. So make her feel like a princess. You don't have to spend your entire life savings on her. But do spend some money – it's the thought that counts. Not because she's materialistic, but because it's a sign that you care - in her culture.

Having said that, how far you want to take the relationship with her is up to you. But do it the right way. Don't string her along if you have no intention of going serious / long-term with her.

Be honest and upfront with her. Trust is very important to women, and more so for Asian women. (If you're not interested in serious relationships, let that fact be known, subtly - during or after the second meeting.) Respect her time.

Yes, that means, be a man. Which also means, be confident, strong, and supportive. Don't be needy, clingy, or too smothering. Balance is important.

Remember, above all, be respectful of her, who she is, and of her culture. Don't do anything that would make her lose face in front of others or hurt her feelings in anyway.

Treat her right, and give her the caring, attention, love and respect she deserves. And, she will make you a very happy man.

Sincerely,
